They're queer, they're here, we can get used to it

By Heather

THEY'RE QUEER, THEY'RE HERE, WE CAN GET USED TO IT. It's a phrase that's been around for a long time, and it's one that's been used to describe the LGBTQ+ community. In the past, it was used to describe people who were different from the norm, but now it's used to describe a community that is becoming more and more visible in our society. The LGBTQ+ community is a diverse group of people, and it's important to remember that not all of them are the same. Some are straight, some are gay, some are bi, and some are trans. But they all share a common experience of being different from the norm, and that's what makes them a community. It's important to remember that the LGBTQ+ community is not a threat to our society, and it's important to remember that we can all get used to it.

Better than the Fab Four

With more to the music than the Beatles ever were, something could be said for the band's popularity. In this exclusive interview, the band's lead singer, Chris Martin, talks about the band's new album, "Viva la Vida or Death and All That Comes," and the band's future.

Q: The band's new album, "Viva la Vida or Death and All That Comes," is a departure from your previous work. How do you feel about this new direction?

A: It's a bit of a departure, but it's also a bit of a return. We've always been a band that's been able to evolve and grow, and this is just another step in that process. We're excited about the new direction and the new sound.
